Vladimir,

I attempted today to call the numbers you supplied for Dynamo House to order a copy of the book. I didn't get through and got the same message both times about checking the number before calling again, so I assume the numbers are somehow incorrect (I checked my dialing carefully).

Do you know if the numbers are incorrect? If so, do you have the new ones? Thanks.

As I have heard recently, Bill Moore is alive and well in LA. Don Ecker has recently interviewed him and was told that he was a "controlled asset" for the spook community. This article appears in the latest issue of UFO Magazine. As we have always asserted, the MJ-12 documents are generally considered fakes, however this does not answer a few open questions: 1) Why? and 2) Where did some of the interesting information contained in them come from? As most know, the MJ-12 documents list Donald Menzel as one of the "Unholy 12." At first blush, this sounds completely preposterous as Don Menzel was one of UFOlogists most colorful bashers, next to Phil Klass. However, Stan Friedman's latest research uncovered some very interesting things about Menzel's "closet-life," including his involvement in high level intelligence matters. This would shed some different light on Menzel, and now brings to the fore a big question about who in fact really hoaxed the documents.

Moore claims that he is still involved in some work for the spooks.

In reading "Blank Check" by Tim Weiner, he claims that Forrestal went bonkers and began to think that the Japanese were poisoning him and following him around, among other things. Maybe Bill Moore was do a Bennewitz on him :-)

Historically, religion seems to modify itself to fit the needs of the believers who borrow heavily from earlier religions and mythologies. Of course from the believers perspective the have "discovered" the religion.

You would probably enjoy a book called "The Power of Myth". Basically it's a transcript of a PBS TV interview of Joseph Campbell conducted by Bill Moyers (or perhaps you were lucky enough to catch the TV series itself(?)).

I don't want to stray too far from the topic of this conference, so perhaps to make this relevant I'll suggest that perhaps our "New Age Aliens" are nothing more than man's answer to an archetypical divine entity ala Joseph Campbell and/or C.G. Jung.

You've read Tristan Jones?!!! Wow!
I met him about nine years ago in Key West; kept the beer coming and he kept the stories coming. Amazing guy! Maybe the fact that I was a scuzzy sailor helped. ;-)
Now that you mention it, I remember something about the fair-skinned people too. I think it may have been in _Adrift_, but it's been so long since I've read his books I don't remember.

I'd think any holdouts would have come forward long ago. The total take on a real live piece of a flying saucer would be a helluva lot more than $100,000. I'd say offer the money to any Pentagon insider with documents.

A piece of "The Corona Express" should fetch a bigger price than

Kay, like many people researching the UFO field, I have heard various rumors over the years about "detention camps" or "concentration camps" being set up for various "polictical unreliables" in the event of internal U.S. problems.
Perhaps some of the various govt. types that inhabit this forum could

I to heard that on the Harder show, so I went investigating my newest version

Mark,

I just polled Paranet and got your message. I then called Telecom Australia Overseas telephone assistance and told them about your problem. They told me that you should NOT dial 03 (this is our internal interstate accesss number) because that only applies to people calling within Australia. I know I've had similar problems with our nodelist telephone number. My code here in Cairns is 070 but on our nodelist we have to drop first 0 and just have 70. Well, I don't know why we have all these complications.

Anyway, this is what you should dial:

011 - 61 - 3 - 427 - 0955 or

011 - 61 - 3 - 428 - 3636.

and , of course, fax number should be changed accordingly.

I did not put in my original message international access code (011) because I am sure people in the USA know that.

Sorry about it Mark. BTW - did you get my netmail message re the book, I posted about a week ago? It refers to Jerry Clark and the book. I'll be polling again next Saturday evening (our time) and perhaps you can let me know then. Thanks.

In some earlier messages, people were talking about using a spectroscope to break out a light source into frequencies to see if the light was from a known type of source.

A diffraction grating will do the same thing and is easy to use. In fact, my latest Edmund Scientific catalog came today and offers the following in terms of diffraction gratings:

8 1/2 x 11 inch sheet -- A40,267 $7.30
3-D-type glasses with gratings instead of coloured lenses are 5-pair for $6.95 (A42319)

Cardboard mounted slides (ie. 35mm slides) are available too:
15 for $14.50 (A1307) or 25 for $19.95 (A39502).
tel for E.S is +1-609-573-6879.

(disclaimer: I've ordered from'em, but not related to 'em).

When taking a physics class I was given one of the cardboard slide gratings. It works really well, and you can easily see the difference between sodium vapor and incandescent and mercury vapor at long distances. We used them in the lab with flourescent tubes made from specific gases to see their makeup visually.

Robert, as an important point of clarification here, the samples
Michael provided Marshall with were "soil", not "corn" as stated.

The 13 short-lived radonuclides observed were:
Gold-194, Lead-203, Europium-146, Tellurium-119m (m=metastable), Thallium-202, Iodine-126, Bismuth-205, Vanadium-48,
Protactinium-230, Ytterbium-169, Yttrium-88, Rhodium-102, Rhodium-102m. None but Gold-194 and Thallium-202 were observed in the control.

RT> Dutron [sp] was found, a proton/neutron highbrid I'm told, and RT> contained heavy nitrogen.

No Robert, "Deuteron Activation" is the method of radonuclide synthesis posited by Dudley and Chorost to have generated the aforementioned isotopes. NO DUTRON [sic], (I believe you mean deuteron) was detected in the samples! Deuterium is a hydrogen atom which contains the addition of 1 neutron to its nucleus. Regular hydrogen consists of 1 proton and 1 electron. Deuterium is also called "heavy hydrogen" NOT "nitrogen". The "deuteron" is the nucleus of the deuterium atom, which is regarded as a single subatomic particle.

RT> This type of isotope does not occur naturally and could RT> not be created without a lenear accelerator similar to the one RT> at Stanford.

Incorrect...this isotope IS naturally occurring in sea-water in a ratio of approximately 1:6500, and is a stable atomic species.

Finally, there are other potential problems with the data. The short-lived radonuclides described are from only ONE formation, and there was only ONE control sample taken. Additionally, the gamma spectroscopy peaks observed could have been decoded incorrectly. Gamma spec data is difficult to interpret. Lastly, if deuteron activation was the method by which the 13 isotopes were created, there should also have been additional isotopes detected that were absent in the samples.

What we now have is some intriguingly suggestive data which has yet to be corroborated, but Dudley and Chorost are deserving of great praise for the work they've accomplished thus far.

I think I could find some reasoning for this, if the facts do indeed come out this way. The main reason that most of us don't commit suicide is that 1. fear of pain greater than desire to die and
2. religious teachings against it. I could easily see that if a UFO researcher believed very much in his topic, he could come to the conclusion of an athiest, and also conclude that there is no
'penalty' to self-inflicted death (unlike many religions which teach that there is a penalty of some type for doing so).

Does this make a plausible reason?

This would be fine for files going only to other echo sites, but since files may be transmitted across gateways to other networks (internet, compuserve, etc) uuencoding makes sense. Gateways have a tendency to not work real well with 8-bit data, but almost all will pass the ASCII set, which is what makes up uuencoded files.

Hi Mike. Interesting about Blank Check & Forrestall's paranoia.

I haven't read the book -- does Weiner cite any sources for his information?
I understand the family has refused to say anything about the death in the past.

Best,
  Clark

This sounds suspiciously like the REX-84 Bravo plan (FEMA) plan..

What's that you ask?

I have this snippet handy:

SECRET CONCENTRATION CAMPS

The September issue of THE OSTRICH reprinted a story from the CBA BULLETIN which listed the following principal civilian concentration camps established in GULAG USA under the =Rex '84= program: Ft. Chaffee, Arkansas; Ft. Drum, New York; Ft. Indian Gap, Pennsylvania; Camp A. P. Hill, Virginia; Oakdale, California; Eglin Air Force Base, Florida; Vendenberg AFB, California; Ft. Mc Coy, Wisconsin; Ft. Benning, Georgia; Ft. Huachuca, Arizona; Camp Krome, Florida. The February OSTRICH printed a map of the expanding Gulag. Alhough this listing and map stirred considerable interest, the report was not new. For at least 20 years, knowledgeable Patriots have been warning of these sinister plots to incarcerate dissidents opposing plans of the =Elitist Syndicate= for a totalitarian =New World Order=. Indeed, the plot was recognized with the insidious encroachment of "regionalism" back in the 1960's. As early as 1968, the "greatest land steal in history" leading to global corporate socialism, was in a ="Master Land Plan"= for the United States by =Executive Orders= involving water resource regions, population movement and control, pollution control, zoning and land use, navigation and environmental bills, etc. Indeed, the real undercover aim of the so-called "Environmental Rennaissance" has been the abolition of private property.

All prelude to the total grab of the =World Conservation Bank=, as THE OSTRICH has been reporting. The map on this page and the list of executive orders available for imposition of an "emergency" are from 1970s files of the late Gen. =P. A. Del Valle's= ALERT, sent us by =Merritt Newby=, editor of the now defunct AMERICAN CHALLENGE.

Texas isn't mentioned in here that I could see. But then this text is a bit old. Curious though..

  I am going to get killed for this but I think women are superior to men in most everything.
   The pretzels goes real good with the beer and the olive is for the martini but can't for the sake of me figure out what he was drinking to compliment the pickles????   ---Grin---
   He hasn't been getting sick in the mornings, has he???

For Keith Basterfield:

 The latest Skeptical Inquirer (vol.16, #2, winter 1992, p.188) has a short review of your paper on abductees. Barring typo's and special fonts which I can't transmit, I've reproduced it verbatim below. Is it a fair and accurate summary of your and your colleagues findings and conclusions?

 Bartholomew, Robert E., Keith Basterfield, and George S. Howard. 'UFO Abductees and Contactees: Psychopathology or Fantasy Proneness?' Professional Psychology: Research and Practice 22(3): 215-222. 1991. Study of a sample of 152 UFO contactees and abductees finds that 132 have characteristics of the fantasy-prone personality (FPP). Although they appear to function as normal, healthy adults, the authors say, FPP's experience rich fantasy lives and score dramatically higher than control groups on such characteristics as hypnotic susceptibility, religious visions and apparitional experiences. They suggest clinicians consider testing contactees and abductees for fantasy proneness.

 This sounds like a fascinating study, to say the least.

Subject: Delphos Chemical, Hieronymous, etc.

From: chalmers@violet.berkeley.edu (John H. Chalmers Jr.)

Reply to Jim Speiser:
The description of the chemical that Faruk found at the Delphos site is consistent with ordinary soap (Ivory, etc., not synthetic detergents). Soaps are the sodium and potassium salts of stearic, palmitic, oleic, and other medium to long chain fatty acids. Such substances are common in nature and are essential components and metabolic intermediates of virtually all organisms.

Most of the fats, oils, and waxes of plant, animal, and microbial origin are esters of fatty acids. The free acids are released upon digestion and decomposition and free fatty acids would form salts with metallic ions in the soil and very possibly with reagents and buffers during Faruk's analysis.

Other metal ions also form soaps: insoluble calcium and magnesium soaps form as 'scum' when one adds soap to hard water. Lithium soaps are used in greases and other fatty acid derivatives are widely used in industry and industrial products.

While saturated fatty acids and their derivatives are reasonably stable in the absence of microbial degradation, unsaturated fatty acids react with oxygen to become rancid (peroxides, aldehydes, etc.). Some unsaturated oils (drying oils such as linseed) polymerize to higher molecular weight materials.

Fatty acids are also intermediates in the microbial oxidation of petroleum products. My own experience with using unleaded gasoline to kill fire ants in my yard indicates that grass does not grow on the treated soil for up to a year after application. If gasoline, diesel fuel, paint thinner, etc. were spread on the ground, it might take several years for vegetation to grow back completely.

So, I don't see how the presence of fatty acid salts per se at a site is evidence for ET visitation or other paranormal activity.

I'll try to find a copy of JUFOS.

Yes. Stine has a section on 'symbolic Hieronymous machines' where the innards in the box were replaced by a drawing of the the circuit diagram, though the prism, antenna, goniometer and pad were retained as the interface. Both he and Campbell claim positive results.

Stine's book is a good source, even if one doesn't agree with him. He has also written a good book on model rocketry.

There was a short garble in my description of George Van Tassell's 'integratron' for which Hieronymous made electrical parts. I intended to say that the structure was first presented as a time travel device and later as an apparatus for healing. It may have become a discotheque since Van Tassell died and his widow sold the property, but I don't know.
